Theme: 'A Wednesday' is a brave attempt which makes a commentary about the social and political fabric of India. In the recent past, many Hindi movies have treaded along this path and sought to bring in a revolution in at least the way people think about issues. 'A Wednesday' is a welcome addition to that league. It mocks the government, reminding it of the duties it ought to be performing as the caretaker of the common people. Another thumbs up for showing the power of the common man and stating in no uncertain terms that religion is secondary to nationality. And the best part is that all this social commentary isn't preachy speak.

Outcome: It depicts and the frustrations of a common man against the injustice happening in his country, while most of us turn a deaf ear and bear with the injustice, One person takes control decides that he needs to be heard, which eventually shakes up the entire police department. This movie is more like a wakeup call.
